Better rights for home owners in residential parks

New Behavioural Standards

In November 2017, the Manufactured Homes (Residential Parks) Act 2003, which is the law governing manufactured homes, was amended. These amendments brought in new rights and obligations for both Park Owners and homes owners regarding standards of behaviour.

Home Owners

Home owners must respect the rights of other residents and Park Owners including:

- Not interfering with the peace, comfort or privacy of other residents
- Respecting the rights of the Park Owner and their representative to work in an environment free from harassment and intimidation
- Upholding the occupational health and safety of people working in the park
- Ensuring, as much as reasonably practicable, that their guests comply with the above standards

Park Owners

Park Owners must respect the rights of home owners or other residents including:

- Not interfering with the peace, comfort or privacy of a home owner or other residents
- Taking reasonable steps to ensure a home owner does not interfere with the peace, comfort or privacy of others
- Using their best endeavours to ensure an environment free from harassment and intimidation
- Not restricting autonomy over personal or financial matters
